The Philippa Maddern UWA Academic Staff Association Award

To celebrate Philippa Maddern's life and the legacy of her inspirational leadership, the UWA Academic Staff Association (UWAASA) has launched this biennial award that pays tribute to exceptional Academics. UWAASA offers members of the University's Alumni, including UWA graduates and graduands, members of Senate, staff past and present, UWA's valued donors, corporate partners, volunteers and friends of the University, the opportunity to recognise an academic for his/her positive influence on either themselves or the Community. The recipients of the awards should be exemplars of UWA's motto, Seek Wisdom.

Philippa Maddern, Winthrop Professor 1953 - 2014

Philippa Maddern was an immensely creative and versatile individual with wit, energy and fierce sense of justice. A widely respected scholar of medieval English History and an inspiring teacher and academic leader at UWA, she was known especially as an expert on the history of women and the family. Her many publications on medieval England deal with the survival strategies of single mothers, the experience of children in blended families, domestic violence, social mobility, widows and land ownership, and the phenomenon of serial monogamy at that time.

Much of her scholarly work expresses a robust feminism and commitment to social justice. The commitment to equality is evident in her works on the history of citizenship and Australian women. It also played out daily in her active support of the academic union and her tireless championing of both the humanities in general and the careers of younger scholars and students. This generosity, combined with an insatiable intellectual curiosity, was a hallmark of her distinguished career.

Philippa's vast knowledge, experience and practical skills enlivened history teaching at all levels-from first year (a special love of hers) to PhD supervision. She was a dynamic chair of history and head of the School of Humanities, and a wise friend to countless students and staff. She served on numerous senior committees, including the UWA Senate and the UWA Academic Staff Association, and was an active member of the Australian and New Zealand Association for Medieval and Early Modern Studies and the Australian Research Council Network for Early European Research.

Philippa was an "open door" administrator and inspiring leader. Former students, by no means all her own, speak highly of her approachability, sense of fun, and above all her infectious passion for the humanities.

Philippa's warmth, vision and broad cultural interests led to numerous collaborations with scholars in different fields, both at UWA and on the national and international scene. She was the founding director of the Australian Research Council Centre of Excellence for the History of Emotions, Europe 1100-1800.

She ran this multi-university enterprise exuding her collaborative ethos to bring together scholars from widely diverse disciplines and traditions, and instilling a strong focus on its role in assisting younger scholars to get a start in the Centre through its postdoctoral fellowship scheme. She had a deep commitment to helping the new generation of humanities researchers and created the conditions for a temperate ecology that allowed all to flourish.
